CALL FOR APPLICATIONS

The MIT School of Architecture and Planning announces the call for applications for the Harold Horowitz (1951) Student Research Fund. Established in 1999 through the generosity of alumnus Harold Horowitz AR ’51, the fund will make awards on an annual basis to one or more students, graduate or undergraduate, enrolled in a degree program in the MIT School of Architecture and Planning. Awards will range from $1,000 to $4,000.

The Fund has three primary objectives:

• to support research assistantships and student-initiated research projects
• to support extraordinary expenses of research for students working on advanced degrees
• to support the costs of publication of research results that are of exceptional merit or importance. This may include travel expenses to present papers at conferences.

A jury comprised of two to three faculty from the School will meet to evaluate applications according to the Fund’s objectives.

The application deadline is 5PM EST, Thursday, January 3, 2019. All applications must be submitted electronically. Winners will be announced in late February.

A completed application consists of:

1. Completed and signed application form
2. Current resume/curriculum vitae of applicant
3. An abstract (two pages maximum) of the proposed research assistantship or student-initiated research project that includes:
   • A project title
   • A focused summary of assistantship/project or research objective(s) including a description of the project and related expenses
   • A justification of the importance of the proposal
4. A letter of recommendation from an MIT faculty member

Note 1: Non-resident students are not eligible.
Note 2: Abstracts in excess of two pages may not be considered.
